A QUIET LIFE

IR Après avoir exposé dans son jardin en 2016 et 2017 les œuvres de Daniel Buren et Ugo Rondinone - artistes de renommée internationale - Le Bristol Paris a demandé à Kamel Mennour de réfléchir à un nouveau projet. Pour cette troisième collaboration, le galeriste parisien et londonien invite donc l'artiste français Bertrand Lavier à concevoir une double intervention inédite dans le jardin à la française et la Suite Paris du Palace.

Depuis la fin des années 1960, l'œuvre de Bertrand Lavier ne cesse de subvertir les catégories traditionnelles qui compartimentent la création artistique, l'artiste explorant les relations entre la peinture et la sculpture, la représentation et l'abstraction, la vie et l'art. Passant avec aisance d'un médium à l'autre, il développe et expérimente continuellement des stratégies de traduction, de transposition et de conversion, perturbant finalement nos façons familières de percevoir et de concevoir l'art.

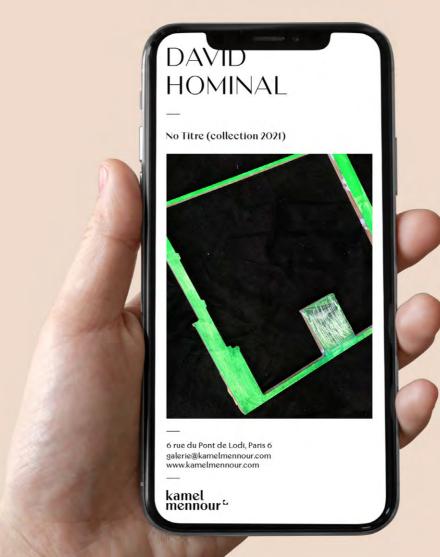

Pour comprendre le projet de Bertrand Lavier au Bristol Paris, il faut revenir à la bande dessinée « Traits Très Abstraits », parue en 1977 dans Le Journal de Mickey qui raconte les aventures de Mickey et Minnie dans un musée d'art moderne factice. Fasciné par cet

ENG After exhibiting the work of internationally renowned artists Daniel Buren and Ugo Rondinone in its garden in 2016 and 2017, Le Bristol Paris has asked Kamel Mennour if he would come up with another collaboration. This time, Mennour has invited the French artist Bertrand Lavier to conceive of a new, double intervention into the space of the Hotel, for both the French garden and the Hotel's Paris Suite.

Since the end of the 1960s, Bertrand Lavier's work has been endlessly subverting the traditional categories used to compartmentalise artistic creation, exploring the relationship between painting and sculpture, representation and abstraction, life and art. Shifting easily from one medium to another, he is continually developing and experimenting with strategies for translation, transposition, and conversion, disturbing our familiar ways of perceiving and conceiving art.

To understand Bertrand Lavier's project for Le Bristol Paris, one has to go back to the cartoon strip 'Traits Très Abstraits' ['Very Abstract Lines'], which came out in a 1977 edition of Le Journal de Mickey, and which recounted the adventures of Mickey and Minnie Mouse in a pretend modern art museum. Fascinated by this imaginary space, Bertrand Lavier began his Walt Disney Productions 'worksite' in 1984, isolating

ENG Painting is a common denominator in David Hominal's work, a physical and sculptural element that traces the genealogy of his multimedia œuvre, between performance, video, dance, and object. Everything centres around the material quality of painting, which Hominal has continued to develop as a practice, including in its potential to be combined with other media.

In the new series No Titre (collection 2021), on show at kamel mennour in Paris, the subject is colour. Its manipulation over large canvases allows Hominal to get beyond the traditional systems of analysis separating figuration and abstraction. He can incorporate kitsch like he can incorporate tragedy, travelling across the entire history of representati
